Carroll Land grid camp starts Aug. 3

The Carroll Land Football Camp will be held Aug. 3 through Aug. 7, according to Carroll High School head football coach Bill Foval, the camp's director.

Assisting Foval will be other area head coaches: Delos Schumacher of Lake City; Lynn Cadwell of Wall Lake; Dave Cochran of Ar-We-Va; and Al Donenkamp, Denison. Jim Molitor, who plays for Buena Vista College and was one of the country's top NCAA Division III punters last fall, will be the kicking specialist for the camp.

The youth program will be for boys, grade fourth through eighth and will run from 9 a.m. until 12 noon with a fee of $20.

The high school program for grades nine through 12 will run from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. with a fee of $25.

The camp fee includes a t-shirt, insurance, pop break, an evening at the Carroll Recreation Center and the cost of bringing a college coach to the camp.

Registration forms are available at Uptown Sporting Goods, Iowa Sporting Goods and Foval's residence which is 105 E. 13th Street. The deadline is July 27th.

The camp is geared for the beginner as well as for the more advanced person. All boys will be grouped according to position and age.

Each group will receive individualized instruction provided by an experienced group of camp clinicians.

According to Foval, the aims of the camp is for each person to learn as much about football as possible and still have fun.

Instruction will cover every aspect of football: fundamentals and drills concerning offensive, defensive and kicking techniques, weight training and competitive psychology. An evening is planned for a visit from a member of the Iowa State University staff and the viewing of Cyclone highlight films.

There also will be some specialty periods for the high school players. The periods will include covering long center snaps, punting, kickoffs and extra points.

Parris pitches Audubon to 10-3 win over Tigers

BY DENNIS O'GRADY

Audubon's George Parris threw a no-hitter for five innings, but then ran into trouble, but still hung on for a 10-3 triumph over Carroll here Thursday night in a make-up game rained out from Wednesday.

Parris finished with a four-hitter and 14 strikeouts in the battle for fourth-place in the Midwest Conference.

Audubon, now 5-6 in league play and 10-7 overall, finishes their league campaign at home with Manning tonight.

The Tigers, now 4-7 in league action and 7-12 overall, close their conference season at Perry tonight.

Audubon opened up a 5-0 lead through the first five innings.

They used two Carroll errors to score three unearned runs in the third, added a run in the fourth on a rbi double by Bill Schmidt and made it 5-0 in the fifth, getting another run on an error.

Carroll battled back in the sixth as they scored four times.

Paul Peterson led off the inning with an infield hit, the first safety off of Parris. Peterson's slow roller hit the third base bag and the third baseman couldn't make a play.

After Tony Puffett reached on an error, losing pitcher Jim White singled home the first run for Carroll.

The Tigers' got two more runs in the inning, helped by a single by Rex Mitchell and a rbi single by catcher Jeff Beidler.

Audubon put the game away in the seventh with five runs, highlighted by a rbi single by catcher Corley Hansen and a run-scoring double by Dan Schmidt.

White didn't pitched that bad for Carroll. He scattered six hits and struck out seven before giving way to Dan Dreesen with one out in the seventh. Six Carroll errors didn't help White.

Baseball strike enters fifth week of negotiations today

By The Associated Press
The contents of mysterious envelopes of club owners and players could hold the key to settlement of the baseball strike that entered its fifth week today.

Hours before the start of a meeting of all 26 club owners in New York Thursday night, federal mediator Ken Moffett delivered large envelopes to the adversaries' chief negotiators, the player union's Marvin Miller and management's Ray Grebey. Moffett also arranged for the negotiators' first bargaining session in six days for today at 2 p.m.

The New York Times said the envelopes contained a proposal designed to lead to an end of the strike.

"He didn't come all the way from Washington just to arrange a meeting (for today) and those envelopes did not contain engraved invitations to the meeting," the Times quoted an unnamed source as saying.

"I'm going to be very disappointed if nothing good happens in upcoming sessions," Moffett said after returning home to Washington, D.C.

Both sides in the strike have claimed a united front after meeting among themselves this week. Player representatives had met in New York on Tuesday.

Ed Fitzgerald of the Milwaukee Brewers, chairman of management's Player Relations Committee, said after Thursday night's meeting that the owners had engaged in "a full discussion" and said recent reports of splits among them are untrue.

"There are no dissidents," Fitzgerald said. "The communications throughout have been excellent. The discussions proved we are all aware of how everyone else felt. We will continue the process we have been working on since we started seeking a solution."

"If there is dissension among the owners, it was not visible at the meeting today," said American League President Lee McPhail.

Eddie Chiles, owner of the Texas Rangers and reported to be one of the dissident owners, emerged from the meeting with handkerchief around his head as he met reporters.

"I'm bloodied but unbowed," he said.

He quickly added that he was joking.

"There was a lot of constructive conversation," he said. "It was not a meeting where specific proposals were presented, but a general discussion of the whole situation, where we've been, where we're going and how we'll get there."

"There was quite a spirit of unanimity by all the owners." Meanwhile, hearings before a National Labor Relations Board administrative law judge were expected to conclude today.

Joe Burke, general manager of the Kansas City Royals, testified that management does not have complete control over baseball's salary structure.

Burke pointed to salary arbitration, where an independent third party chooses between wage proposals from the player and the club, and also noted more indirect influences.

"If you stop signing the players that make up the nucleus of your club, you come under tremendous pressure from your fans and the press," Burke said.

Burke was among five witnesses called during the fourth day of testimony before Judge Melvin Welles involving the Major League Players Association's charge of unfair bargaining by the owners.

The union, on strike since June 12, wants Welles to order the owners to open the clubs' financial records.

Miller, the players association's executive director, testified as a rebuttal witness that, without the financial records, the players "are still bargaining in the dark without very basic information."

The strike "is over a demand that the players give up something that they have," Miller said in reference to free agent movement without compensation.

"It is a demand which, in my mind, the players might give more consideration to if they saw that the clubs' financial situation was precarious," Miller said.

After the owners' first collective meeting since the strike started June 12,

Fitzgerald said it was "merely an exchange of views. We're always interested to receive those views. As far as bargaining, we do that at the table. Views were exchanged and PRC was asked to continue what it has been doing — find a solution by bargaining."

Grebe, director of the PRC, called the discussions "the most positive meeting of PRC shareholders I've ever attended. We had a good dialogue and conversation and none of it will be wasted. It was a constructive meeting."

The session was held under tight security at the offices of Louis Hoynes, National League attorney and a member of the PRC bargaining committee.

Seitz is the man whose arbitration changed the face of baseball

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Peter M. Seitz, the man whose arbitration ruling changed the face of baseball, sits in his book-lined Central Park West apartment, peacefully smoking his pipe and pouring over new papers while the game lies dormant in the throes of a labor stalemate.

He would be the last to regard himself as the "Trigger Man" although the current 29-day-old strike by players can be traced indirectly to the landmark decision he made two days before Christmas in 1975.

"I decided it as a lawyer and an arbitrator," said the grandfatherly, scholarly New Yorker, a self-styled onetime Brooklyn Dodger fan, who ruled that pitchers Dave McNally and Andy Messersmith, their contracts terminated, could offer their services to another club.

This epic finding, upheld later in the courts, shattered baseball's century-old reserve clause, binding a player to one club for life or until traded or sold, and opened the door to free agency, spawning scores of instant millionaires.

It is the owners' efforts to recover some of the power they lost 5½ years ago that has shuttered big league ball parks in the first midseason strike in the game's long history.

Seitz today is disinclined to talk about it. Once outspoken on the case and its consequences, he has discovered that his statements often are taken out of context and given the wrong interpretation. So, lawyer-like, he insists that he not be quoted.

Apparently the veteran arbitrator, who has handled numerous important cases unconnected with the playing fields, sees bigtime, well-heeled sports suffering the same growing pains that has plagued all aspects of private industry during the past century.

It's a tug-of-war of economic strength, listing from side to side like some huge ocean liner caught in a stormy sea.

The clout, it so happens, now belongs to the players. They have had it only since Seitz's decision in 1975 and are reluctant to give too much of it back. After all, the owners exercised dogmatic control for decades, resisting evlging. Seitz was fired by baseball owners two minutes after he made his decision.

"What I did was inevitable," he said at the time. "The owners were too stubborn and stupid. They were like the French barons in the 13th Century. They accumulated so much power they wouldn't share it with anybody."

Then he added: "What I did was no Emancipation Proclamation. Involuntary servitude had nothing to do with it."

It was strictly law.

Oaks fall again, 3-2

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — A triple by Steve Patchin and a double by Tim Corcoran with two outs in the ninth gave Evansville a 3-2 American Association baseball victory over Iowa Thursday night.

Bill Earley, 2-9, was one out away from a two-hit shutout for the Oaks when he gave up a walk and a single before Patchin collected his two-run triple and Corcoran his game-winning double.

Iowa's scores came on solo home runs by Joe Hicks and Scot Thompson.

Larry Pashnick, 6-7, was credited with the win.
