Evans truly enjoys his work. "I like the idea of being able to let lots of youngsters participate and that's something we strive for in our junior high program. Also, this age group is always so eager to learn and they are willing to accept coaching authority. I find that most of our youngsters give everything our coaches teach a try. These are reasons that it is so important that we have good people in our junior high programs," he commented.

There has been a trend in recent years toward strong intramural as well as competitive programs and Evans thinks there is a place for both. "The larger schools especially can well afford both programs to handle large numbers of participants. up. Some of our smaller schools have attempted doing away with the competitive program in favor of the intramural type program but have found that there's been a decline in quality coaching under the intramural program. Also, it's been discovered that this age group tends to get somewhat tired and unfulfilled with competition limited to
